A Blue Ribbon School

Capitol Building

The Proctorians at the awards ceremony

A visit to Bernie Sanders' office

Mr. McGann, Livia, and the late Bruce Nelson waiting for the subway.

In 1993, Proctor High School was honored as a Blue Ribbon school by the U.S. Department of Education. Proctor was selected as a result of the school's excellent academics, the integration of technology in the classroom, and the community's support of the school. Proctor was one of only 260 schools chosen from around the country.

To accept the award, principal Marilyn Grunewald, school board chairman Chuck McGann, and senior Livia Gershon traveled to Washington D.C. in October. They were accompanied by Bruce Nelson of Channel 15, who recorded the entire trip on video. While in Washington, Proctor's delegation had the chance to meet with Senator Patrick Leahy, Representative Bernie Sanders, and former governor Madeleine Kunin, who is the Assistant Secretary of Education. They were also able to hear speeches by Vice President Al Gore and Education Secretary Richard Riley.

The Blue Ribbon award is a prestigious honor for Proctor High School. It represents the Department of Education's recognition of the efforts of all members of the P.H.S. community.

We Remember When . . .

Jessica ran out of gas in the school parking lot.

We had Mr. MacGowan for World History.

We attempted a walkout in support of Kyman.

We survived three days of gorp at Hulbert.

Emetic Youth formed.

Shannon wore two different shoes to school.

Erin and Hilary brawled during a class meeting.

Mr. A hollered "Oh Geez" every time a calculator was dropped.

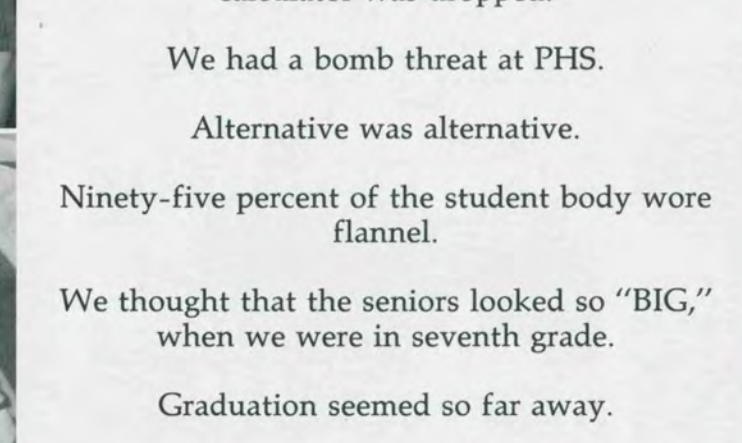

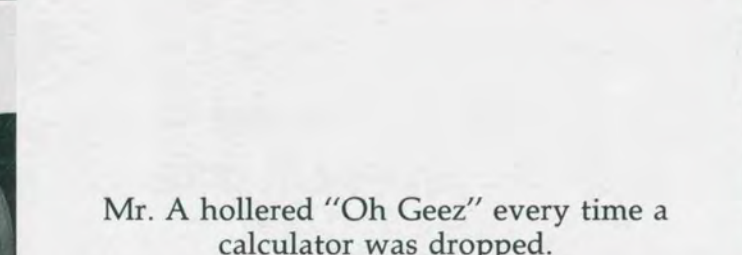

We had a bomb threat at PHS.

Alternative was alternative.

Ninety-five percent of the student body wore flannel.

We thought that the seniors looked so "BIG," when we were in seventh grade.

Graduation seemed so far away.
